

FOREIGN AFFAIRS MINISTER JOHN BAIRD'S HOMOSEXUAL LEGACY

Canada's fabricated "progressive" sexual diversity values are being spread with our tax dollars throughout the world, thanks to homosexual John Baird's initiative as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

Conservative Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird, has left his mark: the establishment of a network to fund gay activism in developing countries, courtesy of the Canadian taxpayer.

Foreign Affairs, now re-named by the Liberal government "Global Affairs", is acutely aware that the average Canadian is not in favor of funding gay activism in family oriented developing countries. The latter should be funded for the provision of clean water, medical assistance, and the development of technical skills to feed their growing populations, rather than the promotion of homosexuality.

Under the Access to Information Act, a request was made for details about funding homosexual groups in developing countries in 2013. Foreign Affairs, however, claimed there were no such records available. The gay media apparently knew otherwise.

WHAT WAS THE FUNDING BUREAUCRATS WERE TRYING TO HIDE?

According to the homosexual website <http://www.dailyxtra.com/world/news-and-ideas/news/canada-funding-global-lgbt-rights-110057> the Government of Canada gave nearly $900,000 to LGBT groups in 34 countries. This money came out of a Foreign Affairs administered program called Canada Fund for Local Initiatives (CFLI). This fund amounted to $14,000,000 in total, which was distributed through Canadian embassies to non-government organizations to promote human rights in the developing world. Most of these human rights were reasonable and uncontroversial, unlike the LGBT funding.

The Department of Foreign Affairs released two of the names of the funded LGBT projects to the homosexual website. The reason given for releasing only a limited list at all was allegedly due to "security" concerns about some LGBT organizations in developing countries.

In contrast to information freely given to the homosexual website, an unrelated request under the Access to Information

Act received only heavily censored documents, in which 33 public servants shuffled requests for information back and forth between 22 different government departments, divisions and committees, presumably to maintain secrecy about this funding.

According to the small list posted on the 2015 homosexual website some of the LGBT projects that the CFLI funded included:

An LGBT rights organization in Madagascar was given a grant in the amount of $19,807.00 to launch an awareness and sensitivity campaign about LGBT rights. These funds went toward purchasing 31 billboards on the main roads, ads in four of the most read newspapers, and radio spots on the two most popular stations for a month long campaign.

The ultimate goals of the campaign were to repeal the sodomy law, create a hate crime law, and intervene in public schools in order to talk about sexuality and safer sex.

An LGBT organization in Ukraine was given a grant from CFLI to launch a three month ad campaign in five cities to promote an LGBT hotline service to provide information on medical and "social and nightlife information".

Although the homosexual website claims that the CFLI funding to LGBT groups only began in 2014-2015, this apparently was not the case. REAL Women of Canada found that there were grants made in previous years to homosexual groups by CFLI. Some of these include:

South Africa

Lesbian, Gay, Bi-sexual, Transgender and Intersex (LGBTI) rights in KwaZulu Natal in order to expand LGBT services there.

2013-2014: A grant to promote human rights, including LGBT rights through community Bush Radio.

2014-2015: Communities funded to provide focus group discussions about the rights of LGBT persons in order to increase awareness and acceptance of diversity.

The Durban Lesbian and Gay Community and Health Centre brought together legal practitioners and community leaders for training sessions and dialogues on LGBTI issues based on Canadian funding.

Lesotho

The Matrix Support Group was funded to facilitate film screenings to increase acceptance of diversity, increase awareness of and respect for the rights of LGBT persons and to encourage an inclusive and open environment for LGBT persons.

All these grants to homosexual groups took place during the tenure of the former Foreign Affairs Minister, homosexual, John Baird.

The reason why African homosexual groups were singled out for funding by Baird may be due to the fact that homosexual rights have not made headway in Africa due to its strong family and religious culture. US homosexual groups have blamed US pro-family groups for this resistance to the homosexual cause. It has nothing at all to do with the US family groups, but rather, with the African pro-family culture. Baird obviously believed, however, that homosexual propaganda, provided unknowingly by the Canadian taxpayers, would break down this resistance in the African countries.

BAIRD TESTS THE TERRAIN BACK IN 2013

REAL Women first learned of Baird's pro-homosexual activity in Africa, when news reports stated that under Baird, an initial $199,397 was handed over to activists in Uganda and Kenya in 2013 for political advocacy. The money was to train legal experts and activists in litigation strategies using human rights language to establish laws to impose rights for "sexual orientation", a term which is unknown in African culture. Funds also went to raise awareness of homosexual demands to promote special rights associated with risky behaviors historically rejected by the entire culture. That is, the Canadian funding was used to interfere with African government efforts to fight the spread of AIDS by reducing risky behavior, and strengthening the African family by protecting youth from anti-family propaganda. African constitutions protect the "right to culture, tradition and religion", as well as "public order, public health, and morals." Attacks on family and marriage are offensive to Africans, who strongly object to western money fueling social unrest in their countries, but that is exactly what Canada was doing.

When the above information about Foreign Affairs funding homosexual groups in Africa came to light in 2013, REAL Women raised strong objections. This angered homosexuals and their supporters in the media, who tried unsuccessfully to silence REAL Women of Canada by making wild and unsubstantiated accusations about us. We continued with our objections, however.

CANADA'S NEW ROLE

According to information provided on the homosexual website, in 2014-15, 44 organizations in over 34 countries received Foreign Affairs funding for local "sexual diversity" promotion projects. Proposals for funding for 2015-2016 has also been advertised on federal government websites, targeting traditionally family oriented countries, such as Columbia, Argentina, Pakistan, Nigeria, Vietnam, Burma, Bosnia & Herzegovina, Chile, Philippines, Papua New Guinea, Vanuatu, Solomon Islands, Marshall Islands, South Africa, Namibia, Madagascar, Lesotho, Kenya, Burundi, Rwanda, Somalia, Uganda, and others.

CANADA'S FABRICATED "PROGRESSIVE" EFFORTS ABROAD

Canada's fabricated "progressive" sexual diversity values are being spread with our tax dollars throughout the world, thanks to homosexual John Baird's initiative as Minister of Foreign Affairs from May 2011 to February 2015. The voracious appetite for funding, previously exhibited by feminist groups, indicates that homosexual organizations will also become accustomed to Canadian funding as they march through previously family oriented countries insisting that these countries adjust their laws, health care and education to suit the lifestyles of homosexuals, lesbians, bisexuals, transgendered, etc.,

Canadians, generally, and REAL Women members, in particular, do not oppose the rights of all individuals to be free from violence, murder, incarceration and the death penalty. Opposition arises when so-called homosexual rights interfere with the natural family, parental rights and the protection of children, contrary to religion and culture in the developing world. Developing countries must be free to uphold their established constitutional "right to culture, tradition and religion", as well as "public order, public health, and morals" without interference via Canadian tax dollars.

This must stop. Please write to:

Please object to your tax dollars being used for propaganda purposes to support homosexual rights in developing countries, contrary to their culture and religion. †

TRUDEAU MUDDLES ABORIGINAL AFFAIRS

Everyone, no matter which side of the political spectrum, agrees that aboriginal affairs is a terrible mess. It is an overwhelming tragedy that, according to Statistics Canada, in 2014, 21% of female homicide victims were aboriginal. It is significant too that 24% of male homicide victims were also aboriginal.

On December 8th, 2015, Prime Minister Trudeau announced that $40 million would be spent over two years on a national inquiry into missing and murdered indigenous women and girls, (although nothing about men, even though violence is a men's issue too).

This inquiry will allow the family and friends of these missing women to express their anguish over their loss. However, it is not expected that the inquiry will add much to our understanding of their problems.

This is because this has been thoroughly studied already:

- Prime Minister Stephen Harper established the Truth and Reconciliation Commission in 2008. It released its final report with 94 recommendations which Trudeau agreed to implement even before the recommendations were released to the public. It is a concern that item #6 recommends that the government repeal s.43 of the Criminal Code which allows parents to spank their children if reasonable under the circumstances. The harm suffered by aboriginal children in the residential school system has nothing to do with our current, limited child discipline law. However, this recommendation is being used by anti-spanking advocates as a reason to remove that provision in the Criminal Code.
- Former B.C. Attorney General Wally Oppal investigated the problem of missing aboriginal women and made recommendations to deal with the situation; His extensive final report and recommendations were released in November, 2012;
- The RCMP conducted a thorough investigation, based on extensive data provided by Statistics Canada in May of 2014, with an update in April, 2015.

We know the problems facing aboriginals in Canada. For example, in the last decade, 400 of the 618 First Nations Communities have been under a boil water advisory. According to the 2011 National Household Survey (NHS), two-thirds more aboriginal Canadians live below the after-tax, low-income measure than the general population. The unemployment rate among aboriginals is roughly twice that of the general population. This survey also found that 80% more aboriginal households report overcrowding and housing in need of serious repairs. More than two and a half times as many aboriginal Canadians between the ages of 25 and 64 have no certificate, diploma or degree, compared to the general population.

In summary, there is a range of social, economic and health challenges facing aboriginals, caused by poverty, unemployment, lack of transportation and mental health and substance abuse issues.

ABORIGINAL EDUCATION

On the matter of aboriginal education, Trudeau announced that he would be making "significant investments" in First Nations' education, with no figures given. The difficulty is that the previous Conservative government had provided aboriginals with funds for aboriginal education, but this was rejected because the Chiefs claimed they had not been consulted and that this provision was "paternalistic". The reality may be somewhat different in that one of the terms for this money was that school boards be established to make education more professional. Apparently, the Chiefs believed they would lose power and funding if native school boards were established. This is based on the fact that there is significant evidence that aboriginal bands raid the education funding envelope whenever they are short of funds in other areas.

PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF FIRST NATIONS FUNDING

The Conservatives had also attempted to place some restraint on aboriginal fiscal activity by passing the Financial Transparency Act, which required Chiefs and band councillors to disclose audited financial statements, including their salaries and expenses. This was not unreasonable since it is Canadian taxpayers' money (over $7 billion annually) that is being distributed, and this information should be made available to the general public. However, Trudeau objected to this legislation, claiming it was unnecessary. This Act is to be reviewed by the Liberal government, and will, no doubt, eventually, be repealed.

Assembly of First Nations (AFN), the country's largest indigenous political group, fell all over itself with joy when Trudeau announced his plans to engage aboriginals in a "total renewal" of Canada's relationship with them. Trudeau has given the Chiefs everything they ever wanted, without their having to be accountable.

WHERE ARE THE CONTROLS ON TRUDEAU'S LARGESSE?

It is puzzling that there does not seem to be anyone in the Prime Minister's Office (PMO) putting a restraining arm on Trudeau, advising him that his statements made during the election that "he would govern from the heart" and that "budgets would balance themselves" are meaningless in the real world. Trudeau seems to be spreading his "sunshine" in order to satisfy his apparent insatiable need for approval. He achieves this by lavishly spending taxpayers' money on special interest groups. Unfortunately, it seems that he has surrounded himself with advisors who unthinkingly accept politically correct concepts and clichés. Critical analysis is not their strength. No one in the PMO seems to study the policies to determine a possible downside to them.

The media, despite reporting this lavish spending by Trudeau, as they are obliged to do, seem unwilling to criticize him for it, and instead, continue to allow a circle of enchantment to protect him.

CANADA'S SHIP OF STATE STEERING INTO PERILOUS WATERS

It seems that the Canadian Ship of State is being steered into perilous waters, towards dangerous rocky shores. At this point in time, we do not know when, or the particular circumstances, that will lead to disaster. All we know is that it is coming our way. †

THE STRUGGLE FOR THE SOUL OF EASTERN EUROPE

Countries in Eastern Europe are being targeted by outside forces, both from the west and the east, in order to influence the policies of these countries.

Once countries have been dominated and controlled by a foreign power, as occurred in Eastern Europe, which suffered under communist Russia's domination for over forty years, they become fiercely determined to remain independent and free from outside domination ever again. As a result, there is a significant struggle taking place today in Eastern Europe over the future of these countries.

Poland, Romania, Slovakia and Hungary, although members of the European Union (EU), refuse to follow the directives of the EU to conform to its liberal policies on abortion, family and homosexuality. Instead, these countries insist on implementing their own pro-life/family agenda. The UN and the US, as well as the George Soros Foundation, are also placing pressure on these countries, at every opportunity, to support the anti-family/life agenda.

It is not just on family policies that these countries are defying the EU: they are also doing so on other issues, such as the Syrian Refugee problem. The EU insists that all its members open their borders to allow the refugees to settle in their countries. This is not happening. Instead, many of the east European countries are deliberately establishing barriers, including, quite literally, walls, to keep out the streams of refugees from crossing their borders.

In contrast, German Chancellor, Angela Merkel, the daughter of a Lutheran pastor who grew up in East Germany, has established a welcoming, open door policy for refugees, because of her Christian belief that it is important to assist the needy, the hungry and the homeless. Also, Ms. Merkel wants to demonstrate that Germany in the 21st century is very different from Germany in the 20th century, with its sordid history of the Holocaust. However, Ms. Merkel, who is jokingly referred to as "Mother Merkel" by Germans because of her practical, common sense approach to issues, has failed to take into consideration in her refugee policy the conflict of cultures that arises when 1.1 million refugees are admitted to Germany, as occurred in 2015.

This conflict of cultures exploded during the New Year's revelry in Cologne, when more than 800 German women, being surrounded by Muslim men, were groped, sexually assaulted and robbed.

The refugees from Syria and North Africa, who were attending the New Year's celebration, did not understand that the more revealing attire worn by Western women does not mean that they are undeserving of respect. The refugees regarded the women as immodest and brazen, and, thus, easy prey. Similar attacks on women occurred in other cities in Germany and other European cities during New Year's Eve celebrations, although they were on a smaller scale.

This clash of cultures in Cologne and elsewhere has caused enormous political damage to Ms. Merkel, both within Germany and also within her party, the Christian Democratic Union. Many in her party are now demanding policy changes re the refugees. The party will be meeting at the end of January to review the situation.

THE BALTIC STATES

The Baltic States in Eastern Europe consist of Lithuania, Estonia and Latvia, and they are experiencing difficult times because of pressure from Russia and the West. These Baltic countries were formerly under the control of Communist Russia, which settled Russian citizens there.

Russia is trying to re-assert its influence by way of a combination of intimidation and bribery. At the same time, the EU and other Western countries, such as the US, as well as the UN, are pressuring the Baltic countries to assume Western anti-family/life values.

It is ironic that, although the Baltic countries are resisting Russia's influence, Russia is also opposing Western values, especially on homosexuality.

Nease, The Liberal, Thornhill, Ontario, December 17, 2015

There are seven east European countries, which have passed legislation in support of traditional marriage. They are, in addition to Lithuania and Latvia, Slovakia, Poland, Hungary, Bulgaria and Croatia. Latvia has adopted the Declaration of the World Congress of Families on the Natural Family. In December 2005, Latvia passed a constitutional amendment defining marriage as the union between a man and a woman. In 2014, Estonia passed the Registered Partnership Act, which has caused a great deal of civil unrest in that country. The vast majority of Estonians are not in favour of this legislation, according to polls. The largest demonstration in Estonian history, against the Partnership Act took place in front of the Estonian Parliament in December 2015.

A petition of 45,000 persons was also forwarded to Parliament protesting the “homosexual agenda in its advancement of the radical redefinition of the family”.

GEORGIA

The country of Georgia is located between Russia and Turkey, between the Black and Caspian Seas. It has deep ties with Russia, both culturally and historically. It also shares with Russia a strong commitment to the Orthodox faith. Georgia was a former satellite of Russia, but is now an independent country, determined to remain so, despite 20% of its population being Russian because of previous re-settlement by Russia.

Georgia has also been inundated by propaganda from the West. This has resulted in children being taught “gender identity” in the schools. Abortion is also a serious problem. With a population of only four million people officially, there are 40,000 abortions performed annually; but there are 120,000 unofficially. The pro-family government in Georgia, however, recently passed legislation increasing maternity support laws and provided a monthly allowance for every third child born into a family, as well as other measures to offset the West’s worst practices that were adopted by the country’s previous socialist government.

In order to assert its Christian roots, Georgia will be hosting The World Congress of Families X, to take place May 15-18, 2016 in its beautiful capital city of Tbilisi. Visit their Facebook page at: www.facebook.com/wcf10/

Eastern Europe is struggling to be independent of Western style, anti-family/life policies, and to maintain its independence from foreign control (mainly Russian). It is engaged in a life and death struggle for its soul. The years ahead will be very challenging for them. †

WHY MOTHERS ARE SO IMPORTANT

BY DR. DOROTHY PATTERSON

Dr. Dorothy Patterson is a Professor of Theology in Women’s Studies at Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary in Fort Worth Texas. This is an edited version of Dr. Patterson’s speech presented to the World Congress of Families IX held from October 27th to 30th, 2015.

Being a mother is both demanding and rewarding—and it is equivalent to a professional pursuit. No one—teacher, psychologist, or spiritual leader—has the opportunity to mold minds, heal spirits, nurture bodies, and develop potential as does a mother. Despite its pressures and difficulties, this job can be amazingly productive and overwhelmingly rewarding, and the results of competent mothering will be passed from generation to generation! For such an awesome assignment, a mother dare not look at rearing her children as merely one of her mundane responsibilities but rather as a highest priority in her life.

Yet why do fewer and fewer women willingly and joyfully commit themselves to this task? Some women see virtue in putting a lock on their wombs, determining that this would be a burden on their marriages and lives.

Children bring changes and sacrifices far beyond the financial challenges. A mother loses much of her privacy and sometimes experiences radical changes to her entire lifestyle. There are no guarantees—children may bring disappointments and sorrows. Yet the job of motherhood offers the highest level of service. You cannot pay a woman to do what mothers do for free. A mother’s commitment to the care of her children would be considered irrational by some. Her rewards are not materialistic benefits that fade but intangible rewards of blessings and honor that will last through eternity.

I see the home as essential for the production of moral, social, and human capital—the work forces and visionary leaders needed for the future. This process, when done with excellence, cannot be short-circuited, mechanized, or standardized to one-size-fits-all.

Far beyond keeping her child clothed, sheltered, fed, and educated, a conscientious mother is responsible for developing her child’s character and teaching him how to relate to other individuals in appropriate ways and how to pursue work with integrity and excellence; she, as no other human being, can feel his hurts and experience his joys, building his confidence and fortifying him with courage for the journey of life.

Remembering the screen classic Magnificent Obsession, I want to challenge this generation of mothers to embrace their own magnificent obsession, i.e., complete dedication to the task of nurturing their children. Such indeed is considered abnormal by many who look at the task of maternity as perfunctory and without need for preparation or training and certainly not the most important task a woman should pursue. Yet, what a difference could be made if suddenly the home and family could be treated with the same importance as other professional pursuits.

WHAT IS THE TASK OF MATERNITY?

First, every woman must be aware of the design and purpose for her body. She is equipped to be the “life bearer,” to conceive, carry, and nurture in her body the beginning of life. She is tied in a unique way to the beginning of life in her womb. Her exclusive role in procreation and her unique human tie with her offspring positions a mother as central in her family and with influence far beyond the family circle. Throughout the generations many have acknowledged that the mother in her home is the last bastion against the immorality and amorality of decadent society. She plays a major role in establishing the values and character not only of her children but also of a nation.

Second, mothers have the potential to be the rock of strength and haven of protection for their vulnerable children. A mother who is anchored in her own faith and whose character is settled in her own life is going to be a formidable influence on her offspring. Just knowing that someone cares for him and is committed to him above every earthly endeavor gives a child confidence for whatever obstacles he may face and serves as a mooring for him in the storms of life.

Third, mothers have the opportunity to lay the foundation for all learning—not just what will be transmitted in the classroom but also the development of skills in living day-by-day. Creating an educational setting that encourages learning demands some important elements: sensory experiences, choices in the midst of daily activities, reading aloud, field trips, exposure to guests, opportunities for social interaction that span the generations. One thread running through the entire process is time and dedication to the task! You can study the lives of exemplary mothers, read books, listen to lectures, but most of all you must determine to build the young lives entrusted to you with personal attention and planning and the investment of all you are to the task—that means quantity as well as quality time.

Fourth, mothers have the opportunity to make their children feel that home is the happiest and best place in all the world—a choice gift indeed. Her daughters have the opportunity to model themselves after her example, and her sons can be inspired by her quiet but consistent encouragement; both daughters and sons are directed by her counsel and overshadowed by her virtues. The family mealtime is also an important key to making home special.

CONCLUSION

Perhaps the home is the toughest workplace of all. Its demands indeed are unrelenting and may even be unreasonable. A mother seems to be on call 24 hours a day and that without a basic wage, much less any overtime. We are not “pay-check mothers,” but we are “working mothers”! A mother will not be recognized nor thanked for her selfless labor. I consider the best present I have given my children to be my presence in their lives day in and day out. The best present they have given me is wrapped up in who they have become, the places they have taken in their own respective homes and the contributions they are making in the lives of their own families, friends, and even with the strangers who cross their paths.

There is no higher happiness and joy than birthing and nurturing life. Nothing in this world I have ever done—the writing of books, radio and television broadcasts, messages from the public platform, attaining multiple academic degrees, teaching classes, or traveling around the world—nothing equals the joy and satisfaction I have personally experienced in molding the lives of my children and then watching them walk across the stage of life, taking their places of service in the next generation.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Dear valued supporter of REAL Women of Canada:

The Federal Government has been given a 4-month extension by the Supreme Court of Canada to devise new legislation regarding euthanasia and Physician Assisted Suicide (PAS). As you are aware, the Supreme Court declared in February 2015 that Canada's current laws preventing PAS are unconstitutional. If Parliament does not pass new legislation by June 2016, then it will be open season in Canada for PAS, just like it is open season on the unborn due to a lack of any legislation dealing with abortion.

During the 4-month extension, the Supreme Court has included an exemption for anyone who wants to ask a judge to end their life so as not to "unfairly prolong the suffering of those who meet the clear criteria." The criteria is anything but clear. The first legal physician-assisted suicide was performed in Canada. It happened in Quebec.

The Federal Government has appointed a Special Joint Committee on Physician-Assisted Dying, <http://www.parl.gc.ca/Committees/en/PDAM>, consisting of Members of Parliament and Members of the Senate. REAL Women of Canada has requested the opportunity to make a presentation to the Committee, for which we are awaiting approval. REAL Women of Canada will never compromise regarding laws allowing PAS. We maintain that this will always be "legalized murder" and should remain a criminal offence. To allow for compromise and to suggest safeguards would be co-operating in evil. Please write to the Prime Minister, your MP, the Justice Minister, and the two joint chairs of the Committee, Hon. Kelvin Kenneth Ogilvie, and Robert Oliphant, MP (Lib), all c/o House of Commons, Ottawa, ON, K1A 0A6.

Refer to REALity March 2015 for talking points for your letter. The Special Joint Committee must hear from as many people as possible, objecting to PAS. The notwithstanding clause should be invoked by Parliament which would give them a five year delay.

Please check the message board in this issue for information on two declarations you can sign on-line to indicate your opposition.

Thank you so much for your help to maintain a culture of life.
